The Daily Quote

"Whether [House Speaker] Mr. Ryan’s inclusiveness results in more votes for a spending measure this week remains to be seen. Scores of Republican House members, ever mindful of a potential primary fight waiting for them back home, seem compelled to vote against almost any spending bill. Representative Steve Scalise, Republican of Louisiana and the majority whip, has used unusually blunt language about Republicans who vote against budget measures to save their skin even as they hope for others to carry the House over the line and avoid a politically toxic government shutdown, aligning himself with Mr. Ryan. ‘The vote that hurts our conference is the no vote from a member who hopes the bill passes, but relies on others to carry that load,’ he wrote in a recent letter to his whip team. The spending bill presents Mr. Ryan with his most important test so far as speaker and will be a measure of how long members will remain enchanted with him."
